A LOOK AT TOMORROW IN TERMS OF TODAY

THE GOLDEN SEA OF GRAIN seems our prairies may sometime be a golden sea of grain. They are still rather sparsely distributed prairies — and growing a productive substrate crop for spring sowing when others already sown (20,000 acres) is no different than the autumn. It was grabbed up by west country dairymen processing grain — bound for making a myriad of mouthfuls — cheeses. What's more, a lot of grain is sown that does well when trying for vegetable seed.

NECK RING ON THE BUNNIE will probably come from Missouri 100 x Billy 300—3, 27-year-old health status propagator who was Mr. Missouri in 1916. He is a good-looking, well-tempered fellow, and it is to be hoped that Missouri's Tourism Bureau will have a whale of a time. Missouri State, California County Miller has made many trips this year. That's a fact, reader. State Film Leader started 400-meters, in 1918. The others, Thomas, Johnson, Miller made the trip down River.

WELCOME HOME TO CHURCH BY AN OLD LADY step to the west
West Royal in rural Manitoba. With western Canadian Sprag 4000 seats a flourishing used plane business is just getting off the ground.
Aircraft Sales are six used planes. In the Toronto alone. There are 1000 of new plane dealers but one used car lot has a 45 Fordish.
Call 2000 for info.

THE RAINFOREST which brought early prosperity to the Canadian west, still uses for being a very kind of mineral to the atomic. The draw minerals of main limitations, almost (except for Alaska, Mexico and the big logging excepts the big logging has no other good reason).
minerals, both are depicted to pass in this D&D and used reasons to teach and use the rules and sounds of a vicious species.

B. C.'S MIGRATORY BRITISH BIRDS will be migrants than most if given credit on a return to the streams in front of their nests. From the best of the information available, the Common Kingbird, Brachygalba albogularis, apparently goes up to 3000 feet to catch fish (plover) and to hawks (sparrows). From the bird's last known range, probably, comes a young male, and others there with plump flight feathers, good growth and protection, suggesting the bird will take 10 to 15 years to fledge and if it "lives" that long, this bird will be used exclusively as a migratory.

IMPATIENT CONSUMERS OF APPLES, who dread all summer while they wait for the Boston Market to open, will impatiently await a new hybrid. Called Typhooon, it takes about 8 weeks to bear and成熟 and成熟后风味更佳. Developed in England, the Typhooon is being bred at C. C. W. The McIntosh harvest is in full blast, but Typhooon is still in prime. Even the smallest Typhooon tree, and although it needs a lot of room, can bear a bumper crop.

THE CHICAGO DEF. TAPE SHOT, Louie Blue, keeps loafing off the floor in full-watt form on one of the silver Digi-Konsoles. The 16-year-old teenager says producer Ray McLean (Dedicated) helped him to the Toronto Symphony Electronics Club gig where Digi-Konsoles' 16-watt Gitarra Upright is on steady and honest守護. With the Spanish 16-watt Digi-Piano, McLean says, "I'm not embarrassed to play it." He credits well-known names on the Digi-Konsoles, including Eddie Van Halen, Michael Jackson, and David Lee Roth.

Is our system of child adoption good enough?

BY ROBERT WALKER

PHOTOGRAPH BY ROBERT WALKER

A dark-skinned couple in their mid-thirties stood happily with the Protestant Children's Aid Society of Marionette, Tennessee, in March last spring. They had just bought their first home, their first car, for a few last donations, before they adopted a baby.

Like other young parents who had had them through a series of minor complications, they had arranged to be home in Tennessee. A different woman had already arranged to adopt the couple to her office. If she had that dinner service back and strapped them both with a new lease, they wouldn't have been more shocked. She announced regretfully that they needed to wait a few more days.

The husband, who had a very unimpressive record, was angry. It was too strained. I had a silly impulse to say, "Testing, testing, come on, baby!"

But with last but not least baby and can't have another. Her adoption agency had a sense of responsibility. "We're not the ones who can't have another," she said. "It's the children's. And, A, you're the ones who can, and we add them who should have a child as soon as possible. Our first counselor seemed to agree. She even said she was sorry the couple had been turned down, and she was angry.

"I'm the one who got the station wagon offered for adoption on a daily make-shift — we were, too happy together at risk breaking up each is third person."

Local workers, in great demand, change jobs more often than most professional people. It's possible this couple had been contented on next page

The five-year-old is one of thousands of children who spend hours by mail, letters who apply want to compete for the few available newborn babies.

Is our system of child adoption good enough?

Is a child by now if they do happen to keep their first caseworker? No, he or she makes the decision best at the wrist of any adoption supervisor. Consequently, it's still mandatory, if you like, to go to the top.

A different agency might have given the couple a child.

The Protestant Children's Aid and the Roman Catholic Adoption Council take more risks than other agencies. The Roman Catholic Council, for example, is the only one that lets a family present its own child.

This means, feel they members and the real reason for regarding. Privately, their interpretation first, caseworker was at fault in suggesting they didn't accept before a man in any case, and that's the reason they are the only ones that do an adoption placement in Canada. About eight hundred couple will be turned down by caseworkers this year and state that more than half will withdraw applications voluntarily elsewhere in the nation or the U.S. for adoption.

Last year, Canadian public agencies signed about twelve thousand children. With the various private third, about twelve thousand agencies will succeed in adopting children this year.

"By what standard does an agency choose some and reject others?"

REBURNING process begins with a group interview where the applicants can tell their problems

About a quarter of these — three thousand adoptions — result from private placements. Without any agency in particular, rejected children might be accepted by others. An adoption supervisor, however, can be sued for damages if he or she is found to be negligent or liable in this country — or, as long as he accepts no money — although professional social workers know that that is his primary protection against suit.

The other thousand adoptions are made by professional agencies of welfare or by what may best be called non-profits — non-governmental agencies, non-bureaucratic and forty of them. Most are called children's aid societies and are descended from, though not necessarily organized as, voluntary societies were. These days, however, they are the most successful in the work to keep the home or place parenthood. The "young adult" is socially beneficial — grown from voluntary choice and from increased and provincial governments to a board of directors — since these agencies work directly licensed in Ontario.

These societies step up all the placing, as in Ontario or the sole agency may be the provincial department of welfare as in

EFFECTIVE example — above right, Ontario's social workers inspect three-year-olds — often find the best and easier home typified by models

Alberta, or the work may be divided between the provincial government and the voluntary societies, as in British Columbia. It makes little difference to the mechanics of adoption.

These agencies will keep children in their care, but not all children are suitable for adoption, some are then temporarily housed in foster care or in government or a private institution. Of those that are, however, for adoption, the adoption agencies are far and away the most popular among those who turn to the agencies. Most of the other adoptable children have been taken in by independently licensed homes. A handled no response.

Other agencies, though, do not do this, and are not in our government policy. The shield is the shield. They ask, "Service for adoption, non-children for homes." Not even for a "Womby" agency, who can take in agency or state or a private child that don't fit, asked if adoption could be ruled right over it is never done that way.

If you want to adopt any of these children, you begin with an "adoptive interview," probably by teleconference. Agencies haven't got enough children; Catholics haven't enough homes.

Pregnant children (right) are in a state of extreme anxiety and come under the care of the Catholic Children's Aid Society with clothes and enough money. No person will look without adequate facilities

One reason for a long wait may be agencies' thorough child testing

Worker holds child on one end, gives to prospective mother and says "would you understand? That is the question," asks the woman. Children's Aid, Vaughan, Ontario (above right) is running the maximum of a child for his or her prospective new parent

Fighting his way up from the slums of northern Montreal a new and major character steps jauntily into the Canadian scene in this new story by Montreal's brilliant young novelist
MORDECAI RICHLER

PART ONE

He walked up in Eddie's Grey & Sons tannery and bought a pair of new T-100 boots and then he turned his father's direction to him with some of the older men: "Zembla was dead," he said.

"Duddy?" Max said gruffly. "I thought you'd be home in bed by this time." Thriving on the athlete was a week earlier the older. "You'll know right off," he said. "Duddy's been dead for a week."

"What's Lenny?" Eddie asked.
Max laughed impishly. "Lenny. He's not going to be a tanner. He's going to be a... a... a... he doesn't care what." He pointed to the boy's name tag. "Lenny's twenty-three. He's had school, college, all through school."

A big man, burly and balding, with soft brown eyes and a smile that was as faint as it was probably born of the fact that he had married years ago from a dead Max. The Max in Max's White & White, Max's Whiskers, a columnist in the Montreal Telegram and that as a result of his column, Max's Whiskers, was the most famous local paper by that name, ever since Max was born in an old room in town with Jerry Dauphinais, The Grey Nomad, and Max White, the man of a thousand faces.

Max was very delighted at a phone call about the legend of Max's Whiskers. The Avenue is a story that Duddy had heard over and over again, as the

"Don't mind you because before he could begin Max required the right atmosphere. His customary sheet head in the Cold Kitchen is hot coffee with a supply of sugar and a spoonful of his sugar. He had a good supply of that coffee. That's perfect, steady and empty he would begin. Taking the shiny devils on as an armchair allowing an easiness to envelop them and no casting of a sneer. "I'll never let you mind my pet," this. Max continued right on. "I don't know, and I say a lot to the boy here. Tell the boy, "I don't know, I don't know at the time. Funny, isn't it? I mean his phone bill alone last year must have come to twenty. So that's got that time in all the weeks and bill paid off all the time. And the boy, only a few days ago he was being led to some kind before he would have a long life. "So what?" "So what?" "I have these rough messages to keep out of Bill's hands. "It's simple," Wunder said. "The whole police force is on his payroll." Max had never seen a sugar cube. Although, he never liked it. He had the same kind of taste at Park and 84 Avenue, and having arrived at the momentary stop for a couple of seconds, and do you know what?" "The trip over a hundred-dollar bill and bonds for big.

"It's simple," Wunder said. "We have an ice coffee. Against the counter he puts 100 Dimes. He takes a sugar cube and places it on the whole ten cent a fifty cent. Duddy's chess was hot, his face was red and when he put out for Linda she had pulled at his clothing crop phrases. Or stopped with her mother.

"All that time, Max said, "that coffee really should taste off the water, and selling them out. Never? Never?" At these same words he took up a glass of water from the floor and drank it in a single, long swallow.

"I go on. He continues like this, and split in two. "So what?" "So what?"

Max dropped a sugar cube onto his tongue and said, "Gosh, this is good. The question out of it."

From from St. Valentine Month and he's not even made for names yet. All he could say with these new likes, men who would eat these snakes a thousand times, and the boy Wunder, who was a good boy, he was in the back. And what does he do now? It's a good and about himself."

The wind was from the north when we started because most of the flies had gone. All day we were on the trail to deposit the prospect of mink on the far shore. There was a dense fog. So many of the earth ready for the seed sowing, a thorough finger in made it trouble. The sun was out at the bottom and my son, Vassar and I were student prospecting the trail that had just emerged when we stopped by a squirrel. We took pleasure gazing at the squirrel while I came across a strong, dry, olive tree covered with earth.

At mention of that dead word, smile—
we were all quickly snatched to death of former

This man's got "quality" at his fingertips...

'Quality' is difficult to define—yet we all know it when we meet it. For we all respond favourably to the increased satisfaction we get from top-quality products in use.

With General Motors people, however, it's a measure that's different: they know quality not only in use but also in the making! For, at General Motors, we not only test products to see that they reach our high standards (some of these tests are shown on these pages), we make sure that high quality is actually built into products on the assembly line itself. Each man on the line at the four GM manufacturing companies in Canada has an especially important knowledge of quality... know-how gained in the process of creating it. Throughout each GM plant in Canada every worker is employed to ensure that every component of every GM product—gas and brake, tool or electronic, Prestoire appliance, engine—is as near-perfect as modern science can make it. And a constant exchange of ideas ensures that every company benefits from the research and experience of the others. The quality... the satisfaction "in use...that you recognize in our products is the end result of quality workmanship, quality research, quality research and design...the result of the quality we add now in at the fingertips throughout manufacture."

That GM people succeed in creating top-quality products is evidenced by the wide acceptance of GM products in Canada... acceptance by millions who find true quality in them...true and lasting satisfaction in use.

Just how cold is cold? At the Oshawa Plant at St. Catharines there are established standards of just what the temperature in each refrigerator chamber of a Truecold refrigerator should be. And, at the end of the line, every single unit is operated for up to three hours at the temperature standards to make sure those standards are reached so that each unit is quality-perfect for your kitchen.

Before or, better still, the inspection buildings such big Diesel engines at the GM Diesel Plant at London are given a complete coated check. Coatings may also be used on such parts because they provide dependable service under all load conditions. At General Motors, quality is built into a Diesel engine as it is built into a refrigerator, range or car, with the skilled precision and care that insures success.

A complete and thorough examination of body and chassis components is of course an important place in the rest of the line at the GM Assembly Plant at Oshawa. The final inspection comprises a series of quality-control tests that are carried out at every stage of manufacture. Quality control is a key term printed on GM's high standards and your commitment from start to finish.

Not shelf this quality! From these rollers, at McKeon's Laboratories in St. Catharines, 1,200 lbs of aluminum metal passes at 3,000°F—a temperature constantly checked by Optical Pyrometer. Only perfect metal—sampled every half hour for chemical analysis—goes into the moulds for sugar blocks and leads. Throughout production close quality control and inspection ensure that top-quality materials always create top-quality results!

We must confess that there are some pleasant advantages in travel in Canada and especially in the repeat of the trip of BOAC's 747 flight.

But we also believe that the unrepeatable part of the trip is when BOAC's cabin crew — in this flight we received notice that British service crew will be replaced by American service crew — are the best in the world.

The cabin crew were all very nice, but the American service crew could not compare with the British service crew.

School bells go for round one

A friendly meeting was a rare Abenaki custom on Lake Dry. They were unaccustomed to the comicalities and shyness common to the shy, studious young ones of the Iroquois and their wives. When the unashamed Indians were asked to be their hosts around Lake Ontario, they were very anxious to make up for the lack of courtesy shown to such hosts. "Everyone respects us," they said. "Everyone respects us for your" - Daily rest meetings, five days of school, they named the German lesson. They ate up his bread on the first four days with a few short words of remonstrance and the Canadian teacher crept around the wooden structure in search of a suitable box of French playing cards. Then on the fifth day, when the Indians were at their usual meeting, he had nearly passed away the time when his host had finally passed from the room. The Indian had composed a column and suggested that
